

An artist's impression of the traitor Fawkes

BONFIRE NIGHT!

King James assassinated in devastating terrorist attack

The kingdom was plunged into a state of emergency last night after a group of anarchic arsonists dubbed the Catholic 13 blew up the Houses of Parliament.

As emergency services sought to quell the blaze, Protestant protestors took to the streets of London to mourn the massacre of their monarch. A mob of them also began the manhunt for the cold-blooded Catholic conspirators. Public enemy number one has been named as Guido "Guy" Fawkes.

There were violent clashes between the grieving Protestants and cheering Catholics, who felt emboldened by the fiery blow struck against the establishment that they claim has persecuted them.

Various contenders have already stepped forward to fill the void at the heart of government, but Henry Frederick, Prince of Wales, remains rightful heir.

Inside: Profile of a Terrorist

Parliamentary Pyrotechnics

Comment: Crush those Catholics